'Realities' exhibit to be featured soon at AES

When earliest man took a burnt stick from the remains of his cooking fire and scratched a crude bison on the wall of his cave, he was doing the same thing artists of today do, says Virginia Museum artmobile curator Allison Hedgepeth.

"He was making a visual record of the reality of his world," says Miss Hedgepeth, who will welcome visitors from the Appomattox area to the artmobile exhibition "Realities," beginning September 20.

"Realities" will be on view at the rear of Appomattox Elementary School through September 23. It will be open daily to the public from 3 to 5 and is sponsored locally by the Museum, and Appomattox Elementary School and the Junior Woman's Club.

"In every culture and through every period in history, artists have sought to depict and interpret reality," Miss Hedgepeth says.

"The painter begins with a blank, flat surface and then manipulates the formal elements of line, shape, space, color, light and texture in an attempt to make the viewer believe he is looking through the frame into another world.

"He can call the third dimension into being, or he can evoke the play of light across the surface of a pond. He can recreate the opalescence of a pearl, or capture a momentary flicker in the eyes of a lovely woman," she explains. "The possiblities are limited only by the imagination of man."

"Realities" presents a selection of paintings from the Virginia Museum's permanent collections of American, Dutch, Italian and Oriental art, all chosen to explore the many ways in which artists have viewed, recorded and interpreted visual reality she says.

The works on board the artmobile are hung in pairs according to painting's basic categories . . . landscape, still life and portraiture . . . in order that visitors may compare, contrast and evaluate the formal means artists have employed to achieve their aims.

America is represented by Jon Carsman, John Gadsby Chapman, Michael Cooper, John Fekner, H. N. Han, Claude R. Hirst, William Morris Hunt, John Koos, and Paul Wiesenfeld

Also on view are works by Ando Hiroshige of Japan, Liu Yuan-Chi of China, and Holland's Michael Janse Mierveit, as well as paintings from the 18th-century Italian School of Canaletto, the 16th-century Venetian School, and by unknown 19th-century Chinese and American artists.

"Our hope is that through this exhibition, visitors to the artmobile will discover the broad variety of truly spectacular ways in which artists have translated visual reality, and, through their hands, have revealed to us a greater reality," Miss Hedgepeth says.

Additional information on the artmobile visit to Appomattox is available by telephoning C. T. Bowman at the Appomattox Elementary School at 352-7463.

Inspection could be costly

"Every time you gain something, you also lose something."

So says Virginia Tech's Glen H. Hetzel, Extension safety specialist, concerning a once-a-year auto inspection in Virginia.

"Auto owners in the state think they are going to save money but it's going to cost them in the long run," he predicted.

The new system, which went in effect in July 1, requires that autos undergo a safety inspection only once a year instead of every six months as previously rfequired.

"We're going to see a vast increase in defective cars on the road."

"Where car owners were previously required to replace defective parts and have their vehicle in top condition every six months, they are now going to have a full year to neglect the repair."

The safety specialist feels there will be an increase in the number of tickets given for defective vehicles as well as a step-up in the policing of inspection stations.

Although everyone has the responsibility to maintain their vehicle, not everyone accepts that responsibility voluntarily.

Hetzel urges drivers to keep a close check on tire pressure and tread and regularly inspect headlights and signal lights for proper working conditions.

"Have a friend walk around the car while you depress the brake pedal to be sure your brake lights are working," he suggested. "Make the necessary repairs as soon as possible."

At ACHS

Agee looks at opening

By Phil Agee

The 1982-83 school session has begun! Eager Freshmen entered ACHS with great expectations while upperclassmen arrived with hopes of making this a year to remember both academically and socially.

The purpose of our weekly column is to share these events and highlights with our interested community. It is my privilege, along with Jennifer Inge, to report through the Raider Review current happenings at ACHS.

An especially warm welcome is extended to Mary Carlysle, Carla Vann, Shirley Eye, John McHale, Margaret Glover, and Judy Braswell, all of whom recently joined the ACHS staff.

Opening day at ACHS was filed with much excitement and spirit. Many students were anxiously awaiting the start of classes while others were busy reuniting with old friends from past years. According to ACHS principal, Donald Armentrout, "A great deal of planning took place for this year's opening." Armentrout also stated that he could feel a sense of excitement throughout the school.

Several new changes have been made that will go into effect starting this year. Homeroom has been delayed until after first period in an effort to help prevent student tardiness. Students now go directly to first period which starts promptly at 8:50 a.m.

A higher grading scale has also been introduced this year in order to upgrade academic standards. Students must now average 70 or above to be classified as passing.

With the addition of several new classes, ACHS students are being provided better opportunities to prepare for the future. Advanced Biology and Chemistry, under the direction of Nancy Jones and Martha Wilson is now offered to students who wish to widen their science background. John Clark, with the help of eight recently purchased computers, will introduce ACHS students to the world of computer programming.

Thirty ACHS Seniors will have the opportunity to enroll in a college-level English course. CVCC, in cooperation with the Appomattox County Public Schools, will offer this course in English Composition to the first thirty advanced Senior English students who register. The class will meet weekly at ACHS on Monday evenings from 7:00 - 9:40 p.m.

Raider Review

Get well wishes go out to our Assistant Principal, John McLean, who is recovering from a broken ankle. Opening day just wasn't the same without him.

Athletics has always been a major part of ACHS's pride. This year is no exception. Girls J.V. and Varsity Basketball teams, as well as our football teams, have scrimmaged several schools and are constantly busy preparing for upcoming games.

Show your support by backing ACHS, this year and be proud to be a part of Raider Country!

In September of 1977 the second house was struck by lightning and partially destroyed. A year later the house was rebuilt and Jessie and his wife moved back for the second time, and lived until his death six years ago.

Today, a grandson and great grandson continue to operate the Torrence farm.
